Dear Mollye;

Sorry I haven't written sooner, but you didn't quite hit the reason. I'm busy, but not so busy I couldn't write, but alas and alack, there's nothing to write. Frankly, there's nothing exciting happening around, that is nothing that would elude the censor's scissors. I think you can understand.

I heard about Feery's getting back, in part. Paul too, but our wires got crossed, and the last time I heard from him he said he was practically on the boat, so I didn't write, so he didn't get on the boat, so I haven't heard from him to these many long weeks. Maybe you could arrange a reconciliation.

I am hearing from most of the boys though, but of course you are too, so there's no copy for a letter from that corner. My sister's home now you know, and she's pining already. Now I should be snug, and say I told you so'. But it doesn't add up to that.

Just after my last letter, in which I bemoaned the fact that the Recorder wasn't catching up with me, sure 'nough, it caught up with me, and the new issue is on it's way, so I won't say anything.

Now comes the time for a snappy close, but no ideas offer themselves, so I'll wind up with thanks for writing, and next time you accumulate a bundle of gossip, address it to APO 493.

Best wishes to all,

Jake
